Notes from the Road: Takeaways from JPM India Conference and Industrials tour

We met with electrical equipment companies and investors during the JPMorganChase India Conference and the Industrials tour last week. While Indian electrical equipment companies trade at a premium to regional peers (India: 50-60x 1-year forward P/E vs. Korea: <30x; China: <20x), we sensed growing optimism around the T&D sector from both investors and companies, underpinned by robust power-demand growth in India (6.4% p.a. over the next five years vs. 3.5% globally, per Siemens Energy India), macro growth, and electrification. The companies we met are expanding transformer capacity meaningfully (e.g., Siemens Energy India plans to quadruple transformer capacity by FY30-32), and we believe Indian players are well positioned to gain market share in the global T&D market. We also see several similarities between Indian and Chinese T&D manufacturers, including high localization of components (~90% sourced domestically in India), scale, and the availability of talent and land. Based on our observations, delivery times for medium- to high-voltage transformers for Indian players are comparable to those of Chinese peers (manufacturing cycle <60 days). Overseas orders as a share of total remain small for the Indian subsidiaries of global electrical equipment players today, but we expect this ratio to rise gradually—particularly for high-voltage T&D equipment and especially into the U.S. and Europe—given persistently long lead times for Korean T&D manufacturers (~3 years for HV transformers) that show no sign of easing, and the recently announced U.S. Executive Order (note), which introduces uncertainty around Chinese companies' market share in the U.S. Overall, the meetings did not change our view that high-voltage equipment remains structurally tight in developed markets, but we are becoming incrementally wary of the longer-term demand/supply outlook for low- to mid-voltage products such as transformers, given initial signs that Indian players are winning orders in the U.S. unregulated market.

- Bushing is a major bottleneck for transformers: We visited Yash Highvoltage Ltd (YASHHV.IN, NC), which describes itself as the largest pure-play manufacturer of transformer bushings—and the only independent player. The company currently focuses on bushings for 72 kV / 145 kV / 245 kV transformers, and expects to be able to manufacture products for up to 500 kV transformers after its capacity expansion. While new entrants are looking to move into component manufacturing, transformer companies highlighted the stringent certification/testing requirements and the critical nature of these components, suggesting ramp-up for new players could be gradual (see note from our India Industrials analysts). Several transformer manufacturers are also backward-integrating into components to reduce dependency on external suppliers. Yash's management said it typically takes 5–7 years for a bushing supplier to be added to the approved vendor lists of major transformer manufacturers. Yash's lead time is currently 9–12 months, versus around three years for global peers. Management noted the company has been approached by U.S./EU manufacturers and has already received orders from two major global power equipment makers.
- Delivery times for Indian transformers are comparable to Chinese peers: We visited a high-voltage transformer manufacturer, Atlanta Electrical (ATLANTA.E.IN, NC), which has current capacity of 16.7 GVA up to the 220 kV level. Its expansion plan (to >30 GVA) would extend its product suite to 400

kV. The plant is operating at a solid 80–85% utilization rate. The company can manufacture a transformer in under two months—efficiency that is broadly comparable with Chinese players. While transformer-core winding is a bottleneck for many Western manufacturers, Atlanta can complete high-voltage windings within a week (vs. months for some Western peers). Management also noted that labor is not a major constraint, as it takes ~six months to train staff across the main steps of the manufacturing process. They attributed much of this efficiency to India's integrated T&D equipment supply chain: ~90% of components are sourced domestically, including key parts such as tap changers and bushings.

- Overseas opportunities abound for Indian T&D players: Component makers and smaller transformer companies highlighted rising inbound export inquiries for their new facilities. They noted multiple queries from customers across several regions (including the U.S., Europe, and others), and said some prospective clients have requested factory visits. One transformer manufacturer shared that it recently supplied equipment to U.S. AI data centers as an OEM for a U.S. transformer company. While overseas sales currently represent only a small portion of total revenue, these companies are keen to scale international business given higher margins/ASPs versus domestic sales. The core advantages of Indian manufacturers were cited as talent availability, component ecosystem, a high level of localization, and also free trade agreements between India and other countries.
- Structural growth for India's power grid: We attended a panel session at the India Conference featuring the MD and CEO of Siemens Energy India. The company is committed to ~USD300mn of capacity-expansion investment (as part of the parent's USD2bn expansion plan). This investment is premised on the structural growth opportunity in India's T&D market. The CEO forecasts India's peak power demand to rise from 271 GW today to 459 GW by FY2036, driven by urbanization, industrialization, EV adoption, broader electrification, and data center growth. He expects generation capacity to roughly double over the period, alongside ~2x growth in grid capacity. He also highlighted the need to expand high-voltage substations and HVDC transmission, modernize and stabilize the grid, and accelerate grid digitalization.
- Subsidiaries of global manufacturers in India are the core beneficiaries: Our India Industrials analysts are positive on the Indian subsidiaries of the big 3 power equipment makers globally (GVTD, POWERIND and ENRIN) following the conference/trip (note). They believe these companies are well positioned to capture exports, given "allocation" from parents, certifications and quality assurances. Also, flexibility and visibility to allocate capacity between domestic vs. exports remains highest for these companies, given the large global backlog (India is less than 5% of the backlog for GE Vernova, Hitachi Energy and Siemens Energy Global). ENRIN plans to expand its transformer capacity by 4X by FY30-32 (from 15GVA to 60GVA). The CEO of Siemens Energy India also highlighted that the capability/quality of HV transformers manufactured in Indian factories is the same as that in Siemens Energy's global factories, positioning it well for product exports. Exports account for ~25% of total now, mostly to U.S./Europe.

The chart(s) show J.P. Morgan's continuing coverage of the stocks; the current analysts may or may not have covered it over the entire period. J.P. Morgan ratings or designations: OW = Overweight, N= Neutral, UW = Underweight, NR = Not Rated

Explanation of Equity Research Ratings, Designations and Analyst(s) Coverage Universe:

J.P. Morgan uses the following rating system: Overweight (over the duration of the price target indicated in this report, we expect this stock will outperform the average total return of the stocks in the Research Analyst's, or the Research Analyst's team's, coverage universe); Neutral (over the duration of the price target indicated in this report, we expect this stock will perform in line with the average total return of the stocks in the Research Analyst's, or the Research Analyst's team's, coverage universe); and Underweight (over the duration of the price target indicated in this report, we expect this stock will underperform the average total return of the stocks in the Research Analyst's, or the Research Analyst's team's, coverage universe. NR is Not Rated. In this case, J.P. Morgan has removed the rating and, if applicable, the price target, for this stock because of either a lack of a sufficient fundamental basis or for legal, regulatory or policy reasons. The previous rating and, if applicable, the price target, no longer should be relied upon. An NR designation is not a recommendation or a rating. Some stocks under coverage have a rating but no price target; in these cases, we expect the stock will outperform/perform in line/underperform the average total return of the stocks in the Research Analyst's, or the Research Analyst's team's, coverage universe of the relevant duration of the region. In our Asia (ex-Australia and ex-India) and U.K. small- and mid-cap Equity Research, each stock's expected total return is compared to the expected total return of a benchmark country market index, not to those Research Analysts' coverage universe. If it does not appear in the Important Disclosures section of this report, the certifying Research Analyst's coverage universe can be found on J.P.
