Global Cloud Capex Tracker:
Spending Acceleration
Continues

Cloud capex continues to move higher (+29% Y/Y in CY27, vs. +14% prior) as demand remains ahead of supply. With cloud growth accelerating, AI monetization improving, and hyperscalers expressing growing confidence in ROIC, we believe Cons capex estimates remain too conservative and skewed higher.

Key Takeaways

- All 4 US hyperscalers remain supply constrained, with demand from both external cloud customers and internal AI workloads exceeding capacity.
- Cloud rev growth accelerated despite capacity limits as utilization improves, AI services scale, and AI adoption drives broader infrastructure consumption.
- Hyperscalers expressed greater confidence in CY26-CY27 ROIC, supported by rising backlogs, multi-year commitments, pricing power, and efficiency gains.
- AWS, Azure, and GCP all see sizable runway ahead as enterprise AI adoption remains early and cloud migration continues.
- Strong operating cash flow, equity/debt financing, leasing strategies, ASICs, and infrastructure efficiencies are helping fund capex while easing FCF pressure.

2027 Consensus cloud capex is now tracking to ~$1.2T, or ~30% Y/Y growth, 15 points, or ~$170B, higher than pre-C2Q earnings (Exhibit 2). The uptick in 2027 capex is driven by the strong CY26 guidance and CY27 commentary by all 4 US hyperscalers this earnings season (Exhibit 3). We believe Consensus estimate's 29% Y/Y growth in 2027 – representing a 68-point Y/Y deceleration vs. 2026 – is too conservative, as it implies non-AI cloud capex growth of just 7% Y/Y in CY27 (Exhibit 8). We therefore wouldn't be surprised if Consensus cloud capex estimates move higher from here given (1) MSe aggregate cloud cash capex is $1.4T, 17% above Consensus (Exhibit 7), and (2) aggregate cloud capex estimates for the top 14 spenders has increased every quarter for, at least, the last 10 quarters. In fact, if we go back to the beginning of this year, 2026-2027 combined Global Cloud capex was forecasted at $1.3T – even lower than the latest MSe for CY27 alone (Exhibit 5). Today, it's forecasted at $2.1T, or an incremental ~$800B of spending, equivalent to 33% of aggregate revenue across CY26-CY27, ~4x the 2014-2023 capital spending intensity average (Exhibit 3).

As monthly tokens processed grows exponentially (Exhibit 7), aggregate cloud revenue for GCP/AWS/Azure accelerates (Exhibit 8), data center commitments expand, and data center component suppliers highlight accelerating demand and elongating visibility, we believe there will continue to be upward pressure on hyperscaler capex estimates. For a full list of MS-covered data center component vendors with exposure to Global Cloud Capex that we believe will benefit from this trend, please see Exhibit 1.

5 key takeaways from US hyperscaler C2Q26 earnings:

1. 3 of the 4 US hyperscalers raised their CY26 capex spending. GOOGL lifted its CY26 capex guide to $195-$205B (from $180-$190B prior), citing an acceleration in capacity delivery to meet demand that continues to outpace supply. AMZN made the most dramatic move, bumping its CY26 cash capex to ~$220B from ~$200B – with memory cost inflation as the culprit – and still flagged it won't be enough to satisfy demand. META narrowed its range to $130-$145B (from $125-$145B), staying demand-constrained and focused on maximizing '26/'27 capacity. MSFT's underlying CY26 spend is unchanged at ~$190B, though a lease accounting reclassification (shifting from finance to operating leases) mechanically lowers the reported figure to ~$175B.

2. Compute demand remains stronger than available supply. All 4 US hyperscalers highlighted ongoing capacity constraints, with GOOGL noting demand continues to exceed internal supply, MSFT reiterating that Azure demand remains above available capacity, AMZN stating 2026 capacity will remain insufficient to meet demand and that much of its 2027 capacity is already reserved, and META expecting industry-wide compute availability to remain tight for the foreseeable future. Importantly, demand is coming from both external cloud customers and internal AI workloads, suggesting limited signs of moderation despite the unprecedented pace of infrastructure deployment.

3. Cloud revenue growth is accelerating despite supply constraints. Cloud revenue growth is no longer solely a function of incremental capacity additions, but also improving utilization, higher-value AI services, and expanding AI-driven consumption of broader cloud infrastructure. For context, Azure accelerated to +43% Y/Y growth with management attributing upside to efficiency gains across CPU/GPU fleets, process improvements, and faster deployment of new capacity, while Azure's incremental capacity was monetized almost immediately. GCP accelerated to +82% Y/Y growth, driven by enterprise AI products, AI infrastructure services, core GCP workloads, and growing contributions from TPU system sales.

AWS delivered its fastest growth rate (+37% Y/Y) in 18 quarters, supported by both AI and traditional cloud workloads, with mgmt emphasizing that AI adoption is increasingly driving incremental consumption across storage, databases, networking, and core cloud services.

4. Confidence in CY26-CY27 ROIC continues to improve. Across hyperscalers, mgmt commentary suggests conviction around future returns remains high despite rapidly rising investment levels. GOOGL highlighted strong long-term demand indicators, growing backlog commitments, renewed contracts and attractive returns from serving customers even when using higher-cost 3rd-party capacity. MSFT pointed to improving confidence driven by TAM expansion, infrastructure efficiencies, application-layer optimization, silicon innovation, model diversification, and pricing power. AMZN emphasized that most AI capacity is contracted on multi-year terms, with server investments achieving breakeven in <3 years and meaningful FCF generation thereafter, while mgmt now sees a path toward a substantially larger long-term AWS revenue opportunity. META similarly highlighted confidence in monetizing AI infrastructure across consumer experiences, enterprise offerings, APIs, agentic solutions, and direct compute monetization, while maintaining flexibility to optimize future deployment decisions.

5. Funding sources continue to diversify, while FCF pressure is being actively addressed. Hyperscalers continue to rely primarily on operating cash flow to fund incremental AI investments, but are supplementing internal funding with additional balance-sheet flexibility. GOOGL highlighted cash flow, debt financing, and recent equity issuance as sources of capital, while META pointed to strong cash generation, incremental debt financing, and infrastructure partnerships. AMZN noted debt issuance and additional financing flexibility as needed. Meanwhile, mgmt teams are employing several strategies to mitigate pressure on FCF, including extending asset useful lives (MSFT), increasing the use of operating leases (MSFT), utilizing 3rd-party capacity as a bridge while internal capacity ramps (GOOGL), leaning further into custom silicon and infrastructure efficiencies (GOOGL and AMZN), and maintaining a high proportion of shorter-duration server investments that can be adjusted if demand changes (MSFT). Taken together, these comments suggest that hyperscalers remain focused not only on maximizing compute availability, but also on preserving balance sheet flexibility while navigating an extended investment cycle.

Morgan Stanley uses a relative rating system using terms such as Overweight, Equal-weight, Not-Rated or Underweight (see definitions below). Morgan Stanley does not assign ratings of Buy, Hold or Sell to the stocks we cover. Overweight, Equal-weight, Not-Rated and Underweight are not the equivalent of buy, hold and sell. Investors should carefully read the definitions of all ratings used in Morgan Stanley Research. In addition, since Morgan Stanley Research contains more complete information concerning the analyst's views, investors should carefully read Morgan Stanley Research, in its entirety, and not infer the contents from the rating alone. In any case, ratings (or research) should not be used or relied upon as investment advice.
